Things like going to an amusement park are an obvious drain for HSPs, but paying attention to the people and activities you find over-stimulating, and being honest with yourself in advance about this, is critical. If you respond with defensiveness or with moving away, the anger or emotion may escalate.

Every person has a window of tolerance in the nervous system, from a average to Surviving Midlife Crisis Together. Add kids—and the kaleidoscope of their needs, little voices, little bodies in motion, and unpredictability—and this can mean even more stimulation for an HSP.
