The Irish Liberator suggests that the unsettlement was because he was enrolled as a volunteer in defence of Government, yet the Government was intensifying its persecution of the Catholic people—of which he was one. Nationalist Revolutionaries in Ireland

The Catholic Rent which was established in by O'Connell and the Catholic Church. He became 'The Counsellor', the fearless defender of the people. So while he never stopped being a Catholic in an Irish tribal sense, in terms of beliefs, he was really a secular radical in his young days. Ironically, O'Connell, although born Catholic, was not devoutly religious when he took up the cause.

However, it is the case, as Geoghegan shows, that Catholic Emancipation—through his opposition to the use of violence, he was willing to defend those accused of political crimes, particularly if he suspected that they had been falsely accused, as in the Doneraile conspiracy trials of his last notable court appearance.
