Fuller refers to this obstinacy as Neo-Darwinian apologetics, a kind of fundamentalist belief system that sacrifices the coherence of science for the sake of maintaining independence from theistic thought. The whole transhumanist project is rich in religious overtones. Review of Steve Fuller, Humanity 2. Sometimes, people talk about this as the "knows" versus the "know-nots". This taboo stems from traumatic religious persecution in 17th century England, which eventually led to the founding of the United States.
