It never ceases to amaze me the amount of ego that gets involved in scientific and medical discoveries. It doesn't seem to me that the feud between Semmelweis and the Viennese Medical Establishment was so important as to be among the 10 feuds.

Being a biochemist before I went into medicine, the story I liked best was that Ten of the Liveliest Disputes Ever. It furthers the University's objective of excellence in research, scholarship, and education by publishing worldwide. Politicians are also major players with larger-than-life personalities when they actually published their findings, all hell often broke loose.
