Generally speaking, then, the Tyrocinium proves that, by the middle of the 16th century, golf in the Netherlands was a firmly established and rather sophisticated game. Improvement of the shaft was accompanied by the general introduction of numbered, rather than named, clubs and by the merchandising of matched sets rather than individual clubs.

For many years it was believed that golf originated in Scotland. That fall, five men formed the club, and in the spring they moved to a course in an apple orchard. The route of transmission to Scotland was likely to have been Flemish traders and craftsmen who had found employment at the Scottish court.
